000000000000 � 000000000000 SHORT STORY OF THE DAY $aaaaaaaaaaa 🐟 oooooooooo A POODLE AND A PRESENTIMENT

From the Chicago Tribune. I may only be a poodle, but I know a good deal about the world-most poodles do! After several years of shorn and beribboned apprenticeship to the fair sex I have come to the conclusion that women are queer creatures- 'kittle cattle," so to speak.

Both my last two mistresses have been full of feminine weaknesses, and the former parted not only my hair out with me, and simply because she became engaged to a man who did not like dogs! Men who do not like dogs should never be encouraged; they are much worse than men who do not like music. I am not particularly partial to music myself. My present mistress bought me from an equally senseless motive-because she want-ed a black dog to match her mourning. What a reason! Thank goodness she has taken to colors again now, and I wear a blue ribbon during the week and a scarlet one on Sundays, not that I consider scar-one on Sundays, not that I consider scarlet at all an appropriate color to wear on the Sabbath.

My mistress is engaged to be married—
re-engaged, I may say, for she is a widow, and a young and pretty one, too.

"He" is rather nice, a bit of a prig, perhaps, and ignorant about poodles, but fearfully clever about scientific things. He can read the pairm of reconless hands, and he fully elever about scientific things. He can read the paims of people's hands, and he casts their—what is it?—yes, horoscopes, that's it, I knew it was; you see, poodles know most things. "He" has presentiments, and he foretold the death of my mistress' elder brother. But this kind of knowhedge isn't all the kind of cleverness she appreciates. She admires a man who knows how to enjoy the present without bothering his head about the future, and his continual presentiments are what human beings call a "bone of contention" between them—but it ain't the sort of bone I should care about. (Poodles, being fashionable, always use

(Poodles, being lashionable, always use the word "ain't.")

I think from what I have noticed that my mistress and her lover are fond of one another, only she is what is called a mod-ern woman; and she thinks it bad form to be too affectionate. The day before yesterday he came in just after we had finished breakfast; he seemed rather in a hurry. She was busy writing letters, but when she caught sight of his race she sprang to her feet and said anxiously: "What ever is the matter, Llonel, dear? How dreadfully worried you look!"

ried you look!"

How women jump to conclusions! I feel gure she thought he had lost his moneybut he hadn't. It was something quite different! He went up to her, and, taking hold of her hands, said: "O, my darling, I have had such a terrible dream" (ho is slways dreaming about something or other), "and I want you to promise me that you will not go to the theater tonight."

She started hard at him and then laughed-rather rudely, I thought.
"Why on earth not?" she asked, raising her eyebrows. "Another presentlment? O, Lionel, dear, how silly you are!" and she Lionel, dear, how silly you are!" and she laughed again.

But he only looked solemn, and said, quite sternly: "Don't laugh, Nell, darling; I dreamt last night that the Duchess the-ater had been burned down and there had been a most ghastly panic. O, it was awful, Nell; and I beg you will not go there to-night," and his face grew quite pale as hight, and his he spoke.

She pouted. "How can you be so stupid, Lionel?" she said. But he began to kiss her and implore her not to go, and he knelt beside her, and—well, you know how men go on!—I turned away and pretended to go to sleep on the mat. After a lot of to go to sleep on the mat. After a lot of coaxing she promised to stay at home; but she wasn't overpleased, and evidently thought his dreams great rubbish, because she told him they bored her.

We spent a dull evening, and she slapped me twice because she was cross at having to stay in alone—yet she had refused to allow him to come to dinner.

The next morning we were just going out to allow him to come to dinner.

The next morning we were just going out for a drive, when her sister came in to see us. She had a newspaper in her hand, and she seemed quite excited.

"O, my dear Nell." she cried, "I am so glad to see you are safe; what a mercy you were not at the Duchess theater last night! There was a terrible fire and such a panic, and the whole place has been burned down." "I am not in the least surprised," answered my mistress, calmly.
"Not surprised!" echoed her sister.
